

Dear Dr. Stokes,

It has come to my attention that, in the search for alternatives to using animals for skin corrosion testing, some three potential solutions have been established. The use of animal testing for commercial products is of great concern to me, and it is my opinion that any alternative to this process is absolutely necessary. The true necessity is, however, in the elimination of animal testing as a whole. I urge you to use your position to this end. The abuse of animals reflects on a culture, and the culture of commercial production, so long as animal testing and abuse continues, is nothing but sinister. Thank you for your time and consideration. It is my hope that the priority of ceasing animal testing will come before the priority of finding an alternative.

Sincerely,
Nicholas A. Alberts